A DOLL’S HOUSE, PART 2
BY LUCAS HNATH
A Doll’s House, Part 2 was one of the most talked about shows on Broadway last year, and for good reason.

Lucas Hnath has taken Henrik Ibsen’s classic and told the story of what happened next. An audacious act by Hnath, for sure, but one executed with such skill that it honours the original beautifully while giving new life to the infamous characters.

The result is a creation with a unique voice, infused with humour and a masterful blend of the traditional and the modern. We couldn’t be happier that Melbourne gets to see it in its first international production.

Directed by 2018 Helpmann Award-winner and MTC Associate Director Sarah Goodes, A Doll’s House, Part 2 stars Marta Dusseldorp, 20 years after last performing with the Company, alongside Zoe Terakes, making her MTC debut, and Company favourites Deidre Rubenstein and Greg Stone. This stellar line-up, along with the brilliant design team, have brought the show to life impeccably.

We’re busily gearing up for our 2019 Season Launch on Tuesday 4 September when all the exciting details of the productions and artists joining MTC next year will be revealed. We can’t wait to share it all with you and look forward to another fantastic year of theatre.

The return of Nora Helmer

A Doll's House, Part 2 gives new life to theatre’s infamous Nora.

When Henrik Ibsen’s A Doll’s House premiered in 1879 at the Royal Theatre in Copenhagen, people were outraged. The theatre had typically provided an experience where its bourgeois audience could have their values upheld, rather than challenged, yet here was a play that encouraged people to reconsider how they viewed their own lives and the societies they were part of.

Set in a time where women were defined by domestic duties, Ibsen’s protagonist, Nora Helmer, ends the play by slamming the door on her husband, children and middle-class existence to pursue the one thing she’s never had – independence.

When the production transferred to Germany, the cast notoriously altered the ending so that Nora did not leave and the audience were left guessing the outcome. Ibsen later described the alteration as ‘a barbaric outrage’.

In 2017 Lucas Hnath’s A Doll’s House, Part 2 opened on Broadway and his defiance in meddling with a classic was duly noted. However, this was quickly countered by many declaring his reimagining of Ibsen’s characters both audacious and thrilling.

This sequel-of sorts picks up 15 years after Ibsen’s story, and speculates the futures and fates of its iconic characters. Hnath says he wrote A Doll’s House, Part 2 partly out of love for Ibsen’s work and partly out of an interest in the state of marriage and relationships in our modern age. ‘I’d say that the action that takes place at the end [of Ibsen’ play] was a shock when it was first produced and it’s still a shock today ... You hit that final scene where Nora says, “We need to talk.” That is such a resonant moment, and it’s such a familiar moment, too. It cuts to the heart of a problem in all intimate relationships.’

The bones of the play took shape while Hnath was on a trip through Croatia. He sat on a bus busily scribbling an adaptation of A Doll’s House and when he reached the infamous door slam, he couldn’t shake the thought, ‘what happens next?’

‘Ibsen’s protagonist, Nora Helmer, ends the play by slamming the door ... to pursue the one thing she’s never had – independence.’
In 1878, a year before he penned A Doll’s House, Ibsen wrote: ‘A woman cannot be herself in the society of the present day, which is an exclusively masculine society, with laws framed by men and with a judicial system that judges feminine conduct from a masculine point of view.’

In the century and more since the original debuted, the play and the role of Nora have taken on iconic status; UNESCO’s Memory of the World register calls Nora ‘a symbol throughout the world, for women fighting for liberation and equality’.

Lucas Hnath’s plays include A Doll’s House, Part 2 (8 Tony nominations, including Best Play); Hillary and Clinton; Red Speedo; The Christians; A Public Reading of an Unproduced Screenplay About the Death of Walt Disney; Isaac’s Eye; and Death Tax. He has been produced on Broadway at the John Golden Theatre, Off-Broadway at New York Theatre Workshop, Playwrights Horizons, Soho Rep, and Ensemble Studio Theatre. His plays have been produced nationally and internationally with premieres at the Humana Festival of New Plays, Victory Gardens, and South Coast Rep. He has been a resident playwright at New Dramatists since 2011. Awards: Kesselring Prize, Guggenheim Fellowship, Whiting Award, two Steinberg/ATCA New Play Award Citations, Outer Critics Circle Award for Best New Play, an Obie, and the Windham-Campbell Literary Prize.

In finding a voice for his modern Nora, Hnath researched profusely, looking into nineteenth-century Norwegian divorce law, reading books including Ibsen: The Dramaturgy of Fear and Marriage, a History and seeking advice from feminist academics. He had strong reference points in his life too, his own mother a divorcee and ordained minister; a profession that remains dominated by men.

Hnath told Vogue that he felt A Doll’s House was Ibsen’s way of defining what freedom was, and through Nora, challenging the audience’s perception of it. ‘Fears about reputation and how we’re viewed in the world, and anxieties about money and social standing – I think those are all shackles that remain today.’

‘You hit that final scene where Nora says, “We need to talk.” That is such a resonant moment, and it’s such a familiar moment, too. It cuts to the heart of a problem in all intimate relationships.’

Tracy Grant Lord joined the throes of MTC creatives back in the early 80s, when she crossed the Tasman Sea from New Zealand and started working alongside directors such as Simon Phillips and actors like Sarah Peirse and Pamela Rabe. ‘In many ways, I’m a product of MTC,’ Grant Lord says warmly.

Having never worked with the Company’s Associate Director Sarah Goodes, Grant Lord was thrilled to be offered A Doll’s House, Part 2 after her friends Peirse and Rabe raved about Goodes’ process working on The Children.

From their earliest discussions about the work in August 2017, Grant Lord knew Goodes would have a clear vision to inform her designs. ‘You take the ingredients from the director and you work with that,’ she says.

It just so happens that a set of parameters had also been established by the playwright, Lucas Hnath. The author’s request for an empty, or partially empty room, and an arena or forum type space was the first consideration Grant Lord had to make. Hnath’s directions read: ‘The play takes place in a room. It’s quite spare. Some chairs, maybe a table, not much else. It ought to feel a touch like a forum. I wouldn’t be sad at all if the play were played in the round. And it’s crucial there be a door. A very prominent door to the outside.’

It was important to Grant Lord that a Scandinavian aesthetic, both architecturally and geographically, was incorporated into the design. This choice pays homage to Ibsen’s original text and helps place the essence of the play’s themes – tradition, pride and independence – on stage. Grant Lord also wanted to explore the pressures and expanse of an outer world beyond the walls of the room. She found inspiration for this exterior setting in the paintings of Norwegian artists such as Hans Dahl, who worked in the era of Ibsen, as well as contemporary Scandinavian photographers like Elina Brotherus who specialises in self-portraits and landscapes.

‘It takes the classical form and honours it completely, while still keeping the contemporary voice powerful.’
The play takes place in 1894, but uses colloquial language of the present day. ‘It takes the classical form and honours it completely, while still keeping the contemporary voice powerful. I think it will speak to many generations,’ Grant Lord says. This juxtaposition of the traditional and contemporary worlds can be found threaded throughout the work from script to design, and there are both intimate and epic themes at play, requiring the design to represent and reflect these various collisions.

Finding the sensibilities that speak to both periods of history is challenging, Grant Lord says. However, it is the finding and planting of these visual clues that keeps her excited by her craft after all these years. ‘When it works, it’s the best thing.’
